This report presents the findings of the third research study conducted within the regional project “Western Balkan’s Regional Platform for Advocating Media Freedom and Journalist’ Safety”<sup>1</sup>, which is implemented by the national journalists’ associations in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Kosovo*, Macedonia, Serbia, and the trade union in Montenegro. The report is a follow-up to the baseline study which presented more broadly the legislation, socio-economic and political situation with media freedom and journalists’ safety identified the key challenges and recommendations for journalists associations and other stakeholders<sup>2</sup>. The main objective of this third research study is to detect new developments and to make comparisons with the level of media freedoms and journalists’ safety identified in 2016 and 2017.

This third research study was conducted by Marija Vukasović, on the basis of the common methodology developed for all five countries. The following methods have been employed for data collection and analysis:

- Qualitative Documents Analysis (QDA) of: research studies and analyses produced by other research organisations, academia, NGOs, individual researchers etc.; official documents produced by public institutions (legal acts, by-laws, strategies, annual reports, minutes from meetings, press releases) and media coverage (texts, articles, news reports and other published materials).
- Qualitative interviews with 16 individuals (journalists, lawyers, media experts, representatives of public institutions or NGOs).
- Official statistical data requested from public institutions or collected from available websites or from other published sources.

Summary of the findings

A. Legal Protection of Media and Journalists' Freedoms

Media freedom and freedom of expression in Serbia are guaranteed by media laws and the Constitution. Media experts think that the laws as such are not bad and that the problem primarily lies in the lack of will to enforce them. Even though laws are basically good and even though they correspond to European standards and practices, there is room for improvement. Certain amendments have been announced by relevant ministries. (Section A)

Work on development of the new “Draft Strategy for the Development of the Public Information System in the Republic of Serbia by 2023” has been initiated. Due to significant disagreement on the composition and work of the initial working group, representatives of journalists and media associations and one independent expert left. The Draft produced by the Ministry was rejected and a new working group, that includes representatives of associations, was established. They continue working on the document. To resolve current issues and problems in the media, a Team for dialogue and the Coordination body were formed in agreement with the Government. (Section A.1.)

Following the exit from the first working group for the production of the Draft Strategy, Independent Journalists' Association of Serbia and four other journalists' and media associations continued working on advancing existing media policies. Assisted by media professionals and legal experts, they produced a document “Contributions to the Development of the Public Information System Strategy by 2023”, which comprises the analysis of the extent of implementation of the previous Strategy and proposals to overcome the existing issues in the media sphere. This document presents the common positions of the five associations and was accepted as one of the starting documents the new working group will use for development of the Media strategy. (Section A.1.)

As in the previous years, journalists and media experts agreed that media freedom is at a low level and it has been declining for some years. This is primarily due to the fact that media is controlled in different manners, while independent outlets and journalists working in accordance with professional standards are under constant pressure. Local media is especially vulnerable. The fact that media freedom in Serbia is at a low level was also stressed by all relevant international organisations in their reports. (Section A.1.)

One of the major reasons for the poor condition of media freedoms continues to lie in the politicised work and lack of efficiency of the Regulatory Authority of Electronic Media (REM), primarily its Council. Media experts believe that politicising of the regulator's work continued, that it has been thoroughly passivised and that there is no political will to allow it to operate independently. The significant problem is that the regulator does not use its legally prescribed authorities sufficiently - in 2017, REM issued only three measures, two reprimands and one warning. This body is not sufficiently transparent and does not operate in full composition, as the REM Council members lacking have not been appointed yet. (Section A.1.)

Pressures against media through advertisers are still quite intense, with local media especially exposed to them. A separate law that would regulate advertising of state companies was announced since it's not regulated by the Law on Advertising; however, this has not been done yet. Meanwhile, this area remains inadequately regulated, resulting in numerous problems including – as media experts believe - unlawful influence on editorial policies of media outlets. This issue has also been emphasised by the European Commission in its “Serbia 2018 Report”. (Section A.1.)

The process of project co-financing for the purpose of achieving public interest goals in the area of public information deteriorated in comparison to the previous year. There were no legal amendments in this area; however, it seems that the real issue lies in the implementation of laws and seeking ways to surpass them. Problems with announcing the competitions, selection of projects, allocation of funds and their evaluation still exist. This year candidates from non-representative media and journalists' associations and certain experts, both unknown to the professional and general public, were appointed as members of the commissions. This happened at the Republic competition, which functioned quite well previously, and resulted in major associations withdrawing their candidates. Commissions continued their work nevertheless, and this was the reason why some associations did not accept funds allocated within the competition. Another problem is that the funds were, against the rules, awarded to media outlets which violate ethical and professional standards. (Section A.1.)

Information in national minority languages is not at a satisfactory level in Serbia. Financial sustainability of media reporting in minority languages is also a major issue due to the lack of financing mechanisms. (Section A.1.)

Institutional autonomy and editorial independence of public broadcasting services is guaranteed by law; however, experts agreed that this is still not implemented in practice. The way PSB is financed still remains a major issue as it cannot ensure its independence. The only form of public control over the work of the public service broadcaster is the Programme Council. However, it is primarily an advisory body and its opinion is not binding. Another issue lies in the fact that the manner of appointment of the Programme Council members does not ensure its independence. (Section A.1.)

Even though libel is decriminalised in Serbia, this has not contributed to a better position of journalists, only to an increase in the number of civil lawsuits against them. Claims are still filed to courts in large number; in the observed period, the number of filed claims was 650. As of recently, there has been an increase in the number of lawsuits by journalists against journalists and media outlets. This is a result of the mounting tabloid journalism primarily, as well as frequent smear campaigns led by pro-governmental tabloid media against certain journalists who are likely to be critical of authorities. Uneven court practices still present a significant issue, even though judges have started quoting the European Court for Human Rights decisions. (Section A.2.)

Political pluralism in media is guaranteed by law and there were no legal modifications to this effect. REM is mandated to supervise broadcasters and ensure observance of the prohibition of political advertising outside election campaigns, as well as representation of registered political parties, coalitions and candidates without discrimination during the election campaigns. REM regulated obligations of broadcasters in the “Rulebook on the Obligations of Providers of Media Services during the Election Campaign”. However, as in the previous year, it failed to perform the monitoring. This is why in 2017, IJAS filed criminal charges against REM Council members citing criminal offence of negligence in exercising authority; the proceedings are still pending. During the reporting period, candidates and parties did not have equal and fair access to media during the election campaign and in the period outside of it. (Section A.3.)

In Serbia, journalists are not licensed. The trend of not inviting certain media outlets to events of public interest continued, while some journalists are even prohibited from reporting from certain events. Pressures are exerted on journalists' associations and are mostly aimed at associations who are critical of representatives of the authorities when media freedoms are violated. The organisation of journalists into trade unions is still quite poor. The Press Council is one of the few organisations which had positive results in its work; however, this body is also subjected to pressures, exerted in subtler manners and through different channels. (Section A.4.)

Protection of journalists' sources is regulated by law and it is generally observed. In the previous year, there were no serious cases of journalists being requested to disclose the identity of their sources or imposed sanctions for this reason. The occurring problem relates to abuse of this institute: an increasing number of media outlets, primarily tabloid ones, quote anonymous sources and abuse this journalistic right. The problem of the lack of protection of sources in the case of electronic communications interception is increasingly present as it questions whether journalists can provide anonymity to their sources. (Section A.5.)

The right to access information of public importance is regulated by the Law on Free Access to Information of Public Importance. Even though the Law is good, it still needs to be improved in some parts. However, the draft law on amendments and supplements to the Law on Free Access to Information of Public Importance which appeared in March 2018 was criticised for the intention to exclude state-owned companies from its implementation. Journalists exercise the right to access information increasingly, but still not enough. Institutions are not sufficiently open, and there are numerous cases of their refusal to respond to the request (so-called "administrative silence"). The major issue still lies in public companies which do not respond to requests and, subsequently, pay the fines issued by the Commissioner for Information of Public Importance. The number of appeals filed to the Commissioner is high. According to the Commissioner's Report, the number of appeals filed in 2017 was by 5.5% higher than the number of appeals in 2016, i.e. 3,680 appeals. Journalists believe that institutions in Serbia are not sufficiently transparent. (Section A.6.)

B. Journalists' Position in the Newsroom, Professional Ethics and Level of Censorship

The position of journalists and other media professionals in Serbia has been quite poor over a longer period of time. They work in very difficult conditions, with low salaries and irregular payments. There is no accurate data on the number of journalists, their salaries and type of labour contracts they hold. The Statistical Office of the Republic of Serbia holds data for the field of information and communication, but it includes a large number of areas and data is not diversified, thus there is no information on the number of employees in the media industry. Journalists are increasingly engaged as part-time associates. Most of the researches on salaries indicate that average salaries in journalism are below the Republic average. (Section B.1.)

Privately-owned media outlets in Serbia do not have separate acts that ensure the independence of the newsroom from the management and the advertising department. Also, they mostly don't have separate rules on editorial independence from the owner and management bodies. One of the rare examples of media outlets who have such internal act is the internet portal Južne vesti. Private media outlets do not have separate codes of ethics. They are exposed to different pressures exerted by owners as well as external pressures. (Section B.2.)

In the previous year, public broadcasting services have not adopted separate codes of ethics. Articles of association of public broadcasting services and law prescribe editorial independence, as well as the prohibition of any form of censorship and illicit influence on the work of public media services, newsrooms, and journalists. As before, the problem is that the editors are formally independent, but that is not reflected in practice. Public broadcasting services are subjected to pressures from different sources. (Section B.3.)

In recent years, non-profit media outlets working primarily in the online sphere and pursuing investigative journalism have become quite prominent. The majority do not have a separate code of ethics. Non-profit media outlets are frequently attacked and under pressure, mostly through smear campaigns in media i.e. tabloids close to the government who label journalists critical of authorities as mercenaries and traitors. (Section B.4.)

Journalists and experts believe that in Serbia there is no censorship in its original meaning, but that self-censorship is significantly rising. Journalists resort to self-censorship primarily for fear for their existence and the fear of losing their job. Journalists working in the local media are particularly affected. (Section B.5.)

C. Journalists' Safety

The Regional Platform for Advocating Media Freedom and Journalists' Safety keeps a database of attacks against journalists and other media professionals in six countries of the Western Balkans. In Serbia, during the period from September 2017 to the end of August 2018, it recorded 28 attacks: 21 verbal threats, six physical attacks, and one attack against property. In 2017 the number of recorded physical attacks decreased, while the number of verbal threats to the journalist's life and limbs, and their family members increased; half of these threats were addressed through the internet and social networks. In the observed period, a dramatic increase in pressures against journalists was recorded. The database of attacks and pressures against journalists maintained by IJAS recorded 62 cases of pressures in 2017, twice as many as in 2016. In the first eight months of 2018, as many as 34 cases of pressures were recorded. Journalists' associations are exposed to pressures as well as to threats and intimidation - associations critical of the authorities are the primary target. (Section C.1.)

In December 2016, the Agreement on cooperation and measures to increase the level of journalists' safety was signed between the Ministry of Interior, Republic Public Prosecutor's Office, and seven journalists' and media associations. Based on the Agreement, a Standing working group was established, comprising representatives of all signatories. Since the very beginning, there was a lot of disagreement in the Group about the implementation of the Agreement; in the end, in November 2017, five journalists' and media associations suspended their membership in it. The Group had several meetings with the aim to activate its status; however, by the end of the composition of this Report, the position of associations remained the same. As in the previous year, the Agreement contributed to better communication between associations and the Public Prosecutor's Office and the Ministry of the Interior; a system of contact points has been established so it is easier to report attacks or threats while it is also easier to obtain information about cases. However, although the purpose of the Agreement was to contribute to increased efficiency in solving the cases of attacks on journalists, a significant problem remains as a high number of such cases are unsolved. State officials very rarely publicly condemn attacks against journalists, and when they do it, they do it selectively. (Section C.2.)

When it comes to secret surveillance of communication, there is still no evidence that it is conducted contrary to law. In the previous year, there were no cases of journalists reporting on this issue. (Section C.2.)

Recommendations

Given the general opinion that, although there is room for improvement, the media laws are not bad, a political atmosphere and conditions that would ensure that laws are implemented must be created in the society. Realisation of the following recommendations can contribute to higher level of media freedom in Serbia:

- Advancing the work of Regulatory Body for Electronic Media (REM) and positioning of it as an independent "guardian" of media pluralism in the electronic media market by:
  - Ensuring its greater financial independence through reduction of political influence and increased transparency in establishing of its Financial Plan;
  - Ensuring greater independence of the REM Council members through changes of the authorised proposers for their selection that would, primarily, exclude political and state bodies and determine clear criteria for the election;
  - Separating the independent regulator by making it clear that it is a separate (fourth) branch of government, controlled by the judiciary;
  - Making the role of REM in the pre-election campaign more precise;
  - Increasing transparency and accountability of REM towards citizens, expanding communication channels and arrange the existing ones so its activities are clear to an average citizen.

- Adoption of changes to the laws and by-laws related to project co-financing of media content of public interest by:
  - Introducing the obligatory opening of calls for proposals (competitions) and impose sanctions in case of non-compliance;
  - Introducing a mandatory needs analysis regarding media content;
  - Setting clear criteria for the selection of members of expert commissions and improve the work of commissions;
  - Precisely establishing that the public authority has no right to change the expert commission's proposals regarding distribution of funds;
  - Improving the control mechanism regarding implementation of provisions and establishing an effective legal remedy in this field;
  - Evaluating of projects that have been implemented.

- Regulate the field of advertising of state authorities and other duty holders legally, thus establishing accountability, control of fund distribution and increasing transparency. The system of public procurement of media services must be improved.
- Providing a greater editorial independence and institutional autonomy of the public media services by:
  - Establishing a more stable way of financing public media services through subscription fees as a dominant source of funding;
  - Modifying the composition of the public media service Program Councils, the way their members are selected, their role and competencies, thus ensuring a more efficient supervision over public media services, greater independence of Program Councils and reduced influence over them.
  - Strengthening the transparency of the public services and their responsibility to the public whose interests they should represent and, in particular, establishing a permanent communication services for citizens.
- Harmonisation of case law in proceedings against journalists in relation to publication of information in the media, with the practice of the European Court of Human Rights; trainings and workshops for judges should be organised.
- Improving the legal framework related to the access to information of public importance by amending the existing law. This should be done by extension of the subjects to which the law applies, and not through narrowing it, as foreseen by the Draft Law on Amendments and Supplements to the Law on Free Access to Information of Public Importance. Additionally, the issue of liability and sanction in the case violations of the Law should be regulated. The need for greater transparency of institutions must be ensured; the institutions must make certain information available to the public, primarily by publishing them on their websites.
- Establishing a better legal employment status of journalists in order to improve their economic and social status. The role and position of the trade unions must be strengthened and conditions for establishment of social dialogue created. Branch collective agreement must be signed. The efficiency of the labour inspection in cases where the rights of journalists are violated must be improving, not used exert pressure on the media.
- The independence of newsrooms and journalists from the media owners must be ensured by introducing special rules on editorial independence. The possibility of signing an employment contract annex that defines professional rights and obligations of journalists and editors should be considered as it would protect their professional status more effectively.
- Increasing and encouraging compliance with professional standards. Adoption of in-house, specific code of ethics in line with the Journalist's Code of Ethics in each media should be considered.
- Creating an atmosphere in a society where citizens and, above all, public officials understand the role of journalists in society, and that attacks and pressures on journalists are attacks on democracy. Also, it is necessary that the highest public officials condemn all types of violence against journalists publicly, indiscriminately and unequivocally.
- Improving cooperation between institutions and representatives of journalists and media associations through the existing mechanism established by signing the Agreement on co-operation measures to raise security levels related to journalists' safety, and re-establishing and improving the work of the Standing Working Group established within the framework of the Agreement. It should be done by adopting internal acts thus ensuring a full and effective implementation of the Agreement in all its points.
- Ensuring that the competent institutions act in accordance with a binding instruction that provides for urgent action in cases of attacks on journalists and initiate swift and effective investigations. By doing so, they will send a message to the society that the perpetrators of violence against journalists and those who ordered it will be effectively brought to justice.
- Conducting training for prosecutors and police officers in order to ensure a better understanding of the specific issues related to safety of journalists and more effective treatment by the competent authorities in cases of endangering journalists' safety. Complementary to this, organisation of the training of journalists in terms of their right to criminal legal protection and their obligations regarding criminal proceedings.

Legal Protection of Media and Journalists' Freedom

A.1 Does national legislation provide guarantees for media freedom and is it efficiently implemented in practice? (Reporting period: September 1, 2017 – August 31, 2018)

Indicators	Bosnia and Herzegovina	Macedonia	Montenegro	Kosovo	Serbia
Is the right to freedom of expression and information guaranteed? Does it also encompass access to the internet? Are the legal guarantees implemented in practice?	The right to freedom of expression is guaranteed with the constitutions and with the media laws, including access to internet. There is no specific law which regulates the online sector. Some laws should be improved (defamation laws, access to information law, communication law). Legal guarantees are not efficiently implemented in practice.	The right to freedom of expression is guaranteed by the Constitution and with the media laws, including access to the internet. There is no specific law which regulates the online sector. Some legal provisions should be improved (Law on Audio and Audiovisual Media Services). Legal guarantees are not efficiently implemented in practice.	The right to freedom of expression is guaranteed by the Constitution and with a corpus of media laws, including access to the internet. There is no specific law which regulates the online sector. Since some of the media laws were outdated, currently there is a process of amending the Law on Media, the Law on RTCG. Legal guarantees are not efficiently implemented in practice.	The right to freedom of expression is guaranteed by the Constitution and media laws, including access to the internet. There is no specific law which regulates the online sector. Legal guarantees are poorly implemented in practice.	The right to freedom of expression is guaranteed by the Constitution and media laws, including access to the internet. A.1 Does national legislation provide guarantees for media freedom and is it efficiently implemented in practice?
(Reporting period: September 1, 2017 – August 31, 2018)

Indicators	Bosnia and Herzegovina	Macedonia	Montenegro	Kosovo	Serbia
Was the media legislation developed in a transparent and inclusive process?	General perception is that the process was transparent, but very slow. Current laws are lagging behind technological developments.	In the reporting period, draft-amendments to the Law on Audio and Audiovisual Media Services were submitted to the Parliament. The process was transparent and inclusive.	The process of amending the Law on Media, the Law on RTCG was transparent and inclusive, but the proposed provisions aimed at protecting journalists from owners' influence were not accepted in the final draft-texts.	In 2017, several changes to the draft law on the RTK were debated in a closed session of the Parliamentary Commission on Media. The process was neither transparent nor inclusive.	The process was transparent and inclusive to a certain extent, because relevant journalists' associations were involved. New media strategy is being drafted and amendments to the media legislation were announced.
Have the state authorities attempted to restrict the right to internet access or seek to block or filter internet content?	Such cases haven't been registered.	Such cases haven't been registered.	Such cases haven't been registered.	The Parliamentary Commission on Media proposed the adoption of a new Media Law aimed, among other, at "disciplining portals". The initiative was criticised by AJK and other actors as an attempt to control the online media sector.	In the reporting period the Share Foundation registered seven cases of blocking or restricting content on internet. There is no evidence that the state authorities attempted to violate freedom of expression on the internet.
Is the regulatory authority performing its mission and functions in an independent and non-discriminatory manner?	The regulator is not perceived as an independent and non-discriminatory body by the journalists, because the politicians in power directly influence the appointment of individuals in the highest positions in the regulatory body.	There has been an improvement in the previous years in terms of its efficiency, but the regulator is still not perceived as independent from political interests.	Formally, the independence of the regulator is guaranteed, but it is also necessary to increase its powers, including the power to impose sanctions. The dismissal of a member of its Council was proof of direct political pressure on the regulatory body.	The regulator is not perceived as independent. Nomination of members is politically motivated.	The regulator is not sufficiently independent and transparent and does not use its legally defined competencies. The Council is politically influenced and still works with incomplete composition.
Is there a practice of state advertising in the media and is it abused for political influence over editorial policy?	State advertising in the media is not adequately regulated by law. It has huge impact on the editorial policy of media which receive money from the State Budget. Around 30 million euro is spent annually by various institutions for advertising in the media.	The new Government stopped the practice of state advertising in 2017. However, at local level, municipalities still allocate significant amounts of money from the municipal budgets to the local media. The Association of Journalists of Macedonia warned that this practice undermined professional journalism and infringed the independence of local media.	There is a general perception that the practice of state advertising opens up a huge space for abuse and it is used as a tool for financial support to the media affiliated with the Government.	Public institutions allocate funds to online media in a selective and non-transparent manner. Banners published on news portals do not present any particular activity of the ministries.	State advertising is not adequately regulated in the legislation. Therefore, the allocation of funds is very often selective and not transparent. It is one of the main mechanisms for pressure over the media and on their editorial policies.
Are there any types of media subsidies for the production of media content of public interest and how is it implemented in practice?	There are no media subsidies.	At present, there is no funding scheme to encourage production of content of public interest. There is an initiative to introduce subsidies for print media and media in minority languages.	At present, there are no media subsidies.	There are funds from the Office of Community Affairs within the Prime Minister's Office, but this year's call is not aimed to media but only to non-governmental organisations.	There is a funding scheme aimed at encouraging production of programs of public interest in the electronic, print and online media. There are many inconsistencies in its implementation: some funded programs are not of public interest, lack of evaluation procedures, abuse and misuse of law etc. Even the media that violate ethical rules of conduct are funded.

What are the mechanisms for financing media in the languages of national minorities?	Such mechanisms do not exist. National minorities and vulnerable groups are dissatisfied with the programs produced by the public broadcasting services aimed specifically for these groups.	There are no mechanisms for financial support of language diversity in the private media. The public broadcaster (MRT), broadcast radio and TV, produces programs in the languages of six non-majority ethnic communities.	National minority media are financially supported only through the Fund for the Protection and Implementation of Minority Rights. However, the last call was published in the first half of 2017.	There is no mechanism for funding private media in the languages of national minorities. The public broadcaster (RTK), broadcasts programs in all minority languages (Serbian, Bosnian, Turkish and Roma). Since June 2013, the Serb minority has its own channel on RTK2.	There is a funding scheme provided by the state and municipal budgets. However, media in minority languages are still financially unsustainable, because there is no mechanism to finance informative programs in different languages.
Is the autonomy and independence of the PSB guaranteed and efficiently protected? Does the funding framework provide for its independent and stable functioning? Do the supervisory bodies represent the society at large?	Autonomy and independence is guaranteed by law. There is still no appropriate funding framework for the public services in Bosnia and Herzegovina. There are indications that politicians influence to great extent the nomination of editors and management of the public services. The supervisory bodies do not represent the society at large.	Autonomy and independence is guaranteed, but not implemented. The funding framework does not provide for stable functioning. The MRT Council does not represent society at large.	Autonomy and independence is guaranteed, but it was seriously undermined with the dismissal of two members of the RTCG Council and its President Djurovic (who remains in the Council as a member), the change of the entire management and the editorial team. Therefore, the supervisory body is currently politically influenced and does not represent the society at large. The funding framework was improved – the Government will provide 40 million euro for the RTCG operations in the next three years.	The autonomy and independence of PSB is guaranteed but poorly implemented. Direct funding from the State Budget does not provide stable and independent operation of RTK. The new draft law on the RTK envisages a new mixed funding model: fee collected through electricity bills and 0.4% from the State Budget. The supervisory body does represent society, but it is politicised.	Autonomy and independence is legally guaranteed. However, the PSBs are not financially independent because the funding framework does not provide for their stable functioning. The Program Council is not controlled by the society, because the politicians in power influence the appointment of its members. It only serves an advisory function.

A.2 Does defamation law cause a “chilling” effect among journalists? (Reporting period: September 1, 2017 – August 31, 2018)
Indicators	Bosnia and Herzegovina	Macedonia	Montenegro	Kosovo	Serbia
Are the defamation laws’ provisions overly severe or protective for the benefit of state officials?	Defamation was decriminalised 20 years ago. Current legislation is in line with European standards – the provisions are not protective for the benefit of officials.	Defamation was decriminalised in 2012. The Law on Civil Liability is in place. The Law is being implemented and its provisions are not restrictive for the journalists.	Defamation is decriminalised. There is a general perception that it is easier to sue than to defend from a lawsuit for damaging one’s honour or reputation. Public officials do not demonstrate a greater level of tolerance to criticism, and this practice is not even understood by the courts.	Defamation is decriminalised. The Civil Law against Defamation and Insult does not have provisions that are overly protective for the benefit of state officials.	Defamation is decriminalised, but this has not improved the situation for journalists. The number of lawsuits for non-pecuniary damage is still very large, and in some instances the fines are very large.
How many lawsuits have been initiated against journalists by the state officials in the past three years?	A large number of lawsuits have been filed by politicians against journalists (more than a 100 annually). This creates a very strong feeling of fear and causes self-censorship, especially among the journalists in local media.	According to the Association of Journalists of Macedonia, during the reporting period, approximately 35 new lawsuits were filed against journalists. This figure is ten times lower than in 2012.	From 2011 to June 2017, there were 109 cases of defamation or libel in the courts. In these cases, more than a million euro were demanded from the media, while in 24 adopted cases, media had to pay 45.300 euro.	No lawsuits have been initiated against journalists in the period under review. According to the court registry, there were 59 lawsuits for defamation and insult dating back from 2009. Out of these 59 cases, 10 were filed by state officials, and most of them were senior figures.	There is no official data on the number of lawsuits filed by public officials. The total number of lawsuits filed in the reporting period against journalists is 650. The number of all unresolved lawsuits (including those from the previous years) is 1,011.

A.2 Does defamation law cause a “chilling” effect among journalists?
(Reporting period: September 1, 2017 – August 31, 2018)

Indicators	Bosnia and Herzegovina	Macedonia	Montenegro	Kosovo	Serbia
Are there examples when other legal provisions were used to “silence” journalists for legitimate criticism or for investigative journalism?	105 lawsuits were filed against a journalist working for the daily Oslobođenje. The magazine Slobodna Bosna ceased publishing its print edition in 2015, under pressure from a large number of defamation lawsuits.	Such cases have not been registered.	Such cases have not been registered. However, there is a perception that the large number of lawsuits, large fines and the low tolerance levels of public officials to criticism contribute to the chilling effect among journalists.	Such cases have not been registered.	Such cases have not been registered.
Is justice administered in a way that is politically motivated against some journalists? What kinds of penalties have been imposed?	The courts are under strong political influence. The Basic Court in Banja Luka made several controversial rulings in favour of certain politicians who sued media or individual journalists for defamation.	Large fines have been imposed on journalists or media in several lawsuits filed by high officials of the ruling party Democratic Union for Integration. There is a perception that these decisions were politically influenced.	Such cases have not been registered.	There were isolated cases when judges were politically motivated. For example, in the case of a journalist who was physically attacked, the court ruled a four month conditional sentence to the perpetrator.	There is a perception that in some cases the courts’ decisions were politically influenced, such as the Minister of the Interior against NIN weekly and the Minister of the Interior against the portal Peščanik.
Do the courts recognize the self-regulatory mechanism (if any)? Do they accept the validity of a published reply, correction or apology?	The courts recognise the validity of a published correction and apology when deciding on the non-pecuniary damage.	The court may take into consideration the decisions of the Council of Media Ethics, however this is not obligatory	The courts are not obligated to take into consideration the decisions made by the self-regulatory body.	The courts do not always take into consideration the decisions of the self-regulatory body.	The courts are not obliged to take into consideration the decisions of the self-regulatory body. The lawyers usually submit the decisions of the Press Council when the Code of Ethics is violated.
What do the journalists think about the defamation law? Are they discouraged to investigate and to write critically?	Defamation lawsuits are perceived by journalists as an enormous means of pressure, especially for journalists working in local communities. Many media are not even financially capable to participate in court proceedings.	Only a small number of journalists think that the threat of defamation influences their work.	In the survey conducted in 2018, around 49% of the journalists answered that the threat of defamation is very or extremely influential on their work.	Journalists are generally not discouraged to investigate and to write critically.	Journalists have different opinions when it comes to the negative influence of defamation lawsuits on their work. In the previous survey 26% of the journalists said that the threat of defamation is very or extremely influential on their work.

A.3 Is there sufficient legal protection of political pluralism in the media before and during election campaigns?

Indicators	Bosnia and Herzegovina	Macedonia	Montenegro	Kosovo	Serbia
Is political pluralism in the media regulated by media legislation (for the non-election period)?	There is only a general principle for broadcasters to reflect political views and sources of information.	There are no specific provisions for protecting political pluralism in the non-election period. There is only a general principle for broadcasters to reflect diverse political views and to report in a balanced and objective manner.	For the non-election period, there is only a general principle for broadcasters to reflect diverse political views. The amendments to the Law on Electronic Media define rules on media coverage during election campaigns and political advertising.	There is only the general principle for broadcasters to reflect diverse political views.	Political pluralism for the non-election period is only guaranteed in the Law on Public Media Services.

(Reporting period: September 1, 2017 – August 31, 2018)

Indicators	Bosnia and Herzegovina	Macedonia	Montenegro	Kosovo	Serbia
Is the regulatory authority obliged to monitor and protect political pluralism?	According to the Law on Communications of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the regulatory principles of broadcasting include the protection of freedom of expression and diversity of opinion. It follows that the Communications Regulatory Agency is obliged to monitor the implementation of these regulatory principles during both election and non-election periods.	The regulator is only obliged to monitor the audiovisual media in the election period. It also has the power to impose sanctions on the non-compliant media and in the past year it has increased its decisions to do so.	The newly adopted provisions of the Law on Electronic Media oblige the regulator to prescribe the broadcasters with codes of conduct during electoral campaigns. During the last elections, the regulator conducted monitoring of media's election coverage.	The regulator is obliged by law to monitor and protect political pluralism only during the period of the election campaign.	The Law on Electronic Media provides the obligation of the regulator to protect political pluralism in the media during the election campaign. However, the regulator did not monitor the media during the presidential elections in 2017 and local Belgrade elections in 2018.
What are the legal obligations of the media during election campaigns?	The Electoral Law specifies the principles of pluralism for all media. The Communications Law stipulates the general broadcasting principles which also encompass the protection of freedom of expressions and diversity of opinions, fairness, accuracy and impartiality.	The Election Code and by-laws prescribe the rules for fair and equal access to all political parties, objective, fair and balanced reporting etc.	The Election Code prescribe obligations for the media to provide fair and equal access to all political parties and candidates, and to report in an objective, fair and balanced manner.	Media are obliged under the Election Law and Independent Media Commission Code for Conduct to present fair and equal access to all political parties, objective, fair and balanced reporting.	The Law on Electronic Media and the Law on Public Media Services prescribe rules on fair and balanced presentation of political parties, coalitions and candidates. The regulator adopts the Rulebook on the obligations of the providers of media services during election campaigns.
Do political parties and candidates have fair and equal access to the media during the non-election period and during the election campaigns?	Political parties don't have fair and equal access to media, especially in election period.	According to the OSCE report, during the municipal elections in October 2017 there has been an improvement in the access to a variety of political positions in the media – in comparison to previous elections.	There is an ostensible practice of political bias and unequal access to media for political actors. The consistent infringement of equal access to media principle was evident during the April 2018 presidential elections, as it was visible in previous electoral cycles.	Political parties generally receive fair and equal access to media during non-election and election campaigns.	Political parties do not have fair and equal access to media during the non-election and the election period.

Do journalists have to be licensed by the state to work?	Journalists are not required by law to hold a licence in order to perform their work. There is no legal definition of the notion "journalist".	Journalists do not need a license by any state authorities, but the Law on Media contains a restrictive definition of a "journalist". There were initiatives to introduce "licences" for journalists, but they were not accepted by the Association of Journalists of Macedonia.	Journalists do not need a license by any state authorities. The decision rests with the newsrooms on employing who they deem fit for the position.	Journalists do not need a license by any state authorities to work in media. A.4 Is journalistic freedom and association guaranteed and implemented?
(Reporting period: September 1, 2017 – August 31, 2018)

Indicators	Bosnia and Herzegovina	Macedonia	Montenegro	Kosovo	Serbia
Have journalists been refused the right to report from certain places or events?	In January 2017 journalists from TV N1 were prohibited from reporting from the Palace of Republika Srpska. The "Friends of Srebrenica" media crew was prohibited from reporting from the Memorial Centre Potočari.	Such cases have not been registered in the reporting period.	Every fourth journalist was not allowed to report from an event because they did not have accreditation. There were some serious cases: journalists from the news portal Fos Media were prohibited from reporting from the headquarters of the Coalition for 21st Century during the local elections in May 2018.	A public institution ceased communication with a journalist and carried out a smear campaign against her. AJK reacted and the public institution ended the campaign.	The trend of not inviting or impeding some journalists from reporting certain events by the political authorities persisted in 2018. According to the IJAS' database, there were 13 cases.
Are journalists organised in professional associations and if yes, how? Are there pressures on their association or individual members?	Around 50% of the journalists are members of one of the five registered associations; BH Journalists Association was subject to political pressures and verbal attacks. In March 2018 a member of one municipal council threatened the Secretariat of the BH Journalists with law suits.	The Association of Journalists of Macedonia (AJM) is the oldest (established in 1946) and the largest association, a member of IFJ. The Macedonian Association of Journalists (MAJ), which has been active since 2013, is considered to be close to the opposition party VMRO-DPMNE.	There are three journalists' associations. Journalists have the freedom to associate, but only 23% are prepared to join because they feel that the associations cannot protect their rights. Pressures on the associations or their leaders have not been registered.	Journalists are free to join the professional associations. There is no evidence of pressure. In Kosovo there are two journalists' associations, the Association of Journalists of Kosovo (AJK) and the Journalists' Association of Serbia, with members primarily from the Serbian community.	Not many journalists are members of journalists' associations. Two main associations exist: Independent Journalists' Association of Serbia (IJAS) and Journalists' Association of Serbia (JAS). Others are regional, with Independent Journalists' Association of Vojvodina (IJAV) being the most active. Associations are under constant pressures, especially when critical towards the politicians in power in cases of media freedoms violations
Are journalists organised in trade unions and if yes, how? Are there pressures on the trade union leaders and other members?	There are trade unions within the PSBs. In the public broadcaster at state level (BHRT) two trade unions are active. Others include the Union of Graphic Publishing and Media Workers and the Union of Media and Graphic workers of Republika Srpska. Some of them report pressures. A trade union of journalists at state level does not exist.	There is an Independent Union of Journalists and Media Workers, established in 2010.	There are two organisations: Trade Union of Media of Montenegro and Trade Union of Informative, Graphic and Publishing sector. They have signed an Agreement for joint activities. Around 50% of the employees in the media are members of the Trade Union of Media of Montenegro, including 270 employees in the public service broadcaster. Direct pressures on the associations or their leaders have not been registered.	There is no trade union that represents the interests of all journalists in Kosovo.	Only a small number of journalists are members of the Trade Unions, which are weak and under constant pressures. There is no collective agreement signed to protect the labour rights of journalists.

Are the journalists free to become members of trade unions? How many journalists are members of trade unions?	There is no precise data on trade unions membership. BH Journalists reports on restrictions for journalists and media professionals to organise in trade unions. It is estimated that only 16% of the private media have established TU branches.	There is a union at the PSB. Almost no trade unions in the private media. There are no reliable figures regarding membership, because some members are "in hiding" due to fear of pressures.	According to the survey, every fifth journalist is not free to be a member of a trade union, even though 38% of the respondents stated that they are members of a trade union. Some journalists claim that they would receive threats if they joined a trade union.	The public broadcaster, Radio Television of Kosovo (RTK) has two trade unions. There were pressures before against the leaders of one of the trade unions.	Most of the journalists feel free to become members, but they are generally not interested because unions are weak, although other reasons exist.
Is there a press council and are there pressures on its members?	The Press Council has existed for 18 years and it is the only self-regulatory body in Bosnia and Herzegovina. There are no direct political pressures, but in the last few years there were three organised hacker attacks on its website.	The Council of Media Ethics of Macedonia was founded in 2013 as a self-regulatory body. Almost all national TV stations, news portals and print media are members of this body.	The self-regulatory body Media Council for Self-regulation was founded in 2012. It gathers 19 media, while some of the leading media such as Dan, Vijesti, Monitor and TV Vijesti have their ombudsmen. There were no pressures, but the Media Council is very weak and due to the lack of funding, the Complaints Commission temporary does not meet.	There is a Press Council of Kosovo and there is no evidence of pressure on its members.	There is a Press Council, a self-regulatory body, which shows very positive results in its work. The pressures imposed on this body are indirect and subtle.

A.5 What is the level of legal protection for journalists' sources?
(Reporting period: September 1, 2017 – August 31, 2018)

Indicators	Bosnia and Herzegovina	Macedonia	Montenegro	Kosovo	Serbia
How is the confidentiality of journalists' sources guaranteed by the legislation?	Confidentiality of journalists' sources is guaranteed in several legal acts, although some issues should be defined more precisely.	It is guaranteed by the Constitution and in several legal acts.	It is guaranteed by the Constitution and in the Law on Media. The draft-amendments to the Law on Media are expected to strengthen these provisions further, in accordance with CoE standards.	The confidentiality of journalist's sources is guaranteed by the Law on protection of journalists' sources which came to power in 2013.	It is guaranteed by the Law on Public Information and Media and Criminal Code.
Is confidentiality of journalists' sources respected? Were there examples of ordering the journalists to disclose their sources and was that justified to protect the public interest?	It was generally respected in the reporting period. New cases have not been registered.	It was generally respected in the reporting period. New cases have not been registered. Do journalists feel free to seek access to and maintain contacts with sources of information?	Interviewed journalists are generally free to choose their own sources and tend to maintain durable communication with them.	According to the interviewed journalists, they feel free to maintain contacts with their sources of information.	Almost 57% of the journalists in the survey stated that they regularly or very often have contacts with their sources.	Journalists claim to feel free to maintain contacts with sources of information.	The opinions of journalists are divided. The problem rests with the question of how can journalists protect anonymity of the source in case of interception of communications.

A.6 What is the level of legal protection of the right to access of information?
(Reporting period: September 1, 2017 – August 31, 2018)

Indicators	Bosnia and Herzegovina	Macedonia	Montenegro	Kosovo	Serbia
What are the legal rules on access to official documents and information which are relevant for journalists?	Access is guaranteed by the laws at state and entity levels. There are no specific provisions relevant only for journalists.	Access is guaranteed by law. No specific provisions exist for journalists only. The implementation is poor. In February 2018, the Ministry of Justice announced that the amendments to the Law on Free Access to Information will be drafted, but such a document has not been published as of the end of September 2018.	Access is guaranteed by the Law on Free Access to Information. The amendments to the Law on Free Access to Information adopted in May 2017 made the access to public information even more difficult. The list of information to which access may be restricted by public institutions (on the ground of protecting "confidential data") was extended.	Access is guaranteed. The amendments to the Law on Access to Official Documents adopted in 2017 shortened the deadline for state institutions to respond to requests for public information from 15 to seven days. This was assessed by the journalists as a positive step for their work.	Access is guaranteed by law. There are no specific provisions relevant only for journalists.
Do the journalists use these rules? Do the authorities follow the rules without delays? How many refusals have been reported by journalists?	Many journalists do not use these legal provisions, because the deadline of 15 days is very long. Centre for Investigative Reporting submits thousand requests to public institutions, but they often deny access to public documents.	Journalists are not well informed about the rules and rarely use them. Those who requested access were often refused.	Almost every third journalist in the survey stated that he/she had never submitted a request, while almost the same number have submitted requests but had been refused. Of 67 requests submitted in 2017 13 were refused, while out of 20 requests submitted in 2018 (end of August), eight were refused.	Not many journalists use these rules. Interviewed journalists claim that they have been refused when requesting access to documents and information.	Investigative journalists use this right more than those who work in daily reporting. State institutions often do not provide access to information, the biggest problem are public enterprises.
Are the courts transparent? Is media access to legal proceedings provided on a non-discriminatory basis and without unnecessary restrictions?	Journalists' opinions are divided in terms of openness and transparency of the courts. Some courts lack resources to provide access in time and to meet the demands of transparency.	There is a general perception among the journalists that the courts are not sufficiently transparent.	Court hearings are mainly open for the media. Some hearings, such as the case of "Coup d'état", are broadcast directly. Yet, around 37% of the journalists stated that the courts had demonstrated low level of transparency, and every third journalist evaluates the courts as very or entirely transparent.	Court hearings are generally open to the media. No cases were reported where access to proceedings was not provided on a discriminatory basis.	The courts are not sufficiently transparent, but this mostly depends on the heads of individual institution.

Is public access to parliamentary sessions provided? Are there restrictions for journalists to follow parliamentary work?	Formally, there are no restrictions for journalists to report from parliamentary sessions. However, in 2017 a journalist of TV N1 was not allowed to report from the RS Palace of Justice. Beta Agency correspondent and BN television from Bijeljina have been prevented from entering the Palace of Justice.	The parliamentary sessions are open to journalists. There were no cases of restrictions registered in the reporting period.	The parliamentary sessions are directly transmitted by the public broadcaster. In the survey with journalists, for the third year in a row, the Parliament was assessed as the most transparent institution. 25% of the respondents believe that the Parliament has shown a high degree or complete transparency.	In general, the sessions of the Kosovo Assembly Presidency and the parliamentary commissions have been open to the public and journalists.	Access to sessions of the assemblies at national and local level is mostly provided through direct broadcasts. However, there are cases when journalists were prevented from doing their job properly (Valjevo Assembly).
How open are the Government and the respective ministries?	All interviewed journalists and experts agree that the Government and the ministries are not sufficiently transparent.	Comparing to previous years, there is a general perception among journalists that the Government has increased its level of transparency.	50% of the journalists in the survey perceive the Government as partly transparent, while more than 18% stated that the Government was greatly or entirely transparent.	The Prime Minister holds a press conference almost every week, compared to previous PMs that did not engage in such practice. The ministries tend to refuse to provide answers to journalists when they seek information related to their reporting.	The Government and ministries are not sufficiently transparent: sessions of state bodies on national and local level are still mostly closed to the public. The communication with the journalists is mostly reduced to press releases and press conferences.

B.1 Is the journalists' economic position abused to restrict their freedom? (Reporting period: September 1, 2017 – August 31, 2018)

Indicators	Bosnia and Herzegovina	Macedonia	Montenegro	Kosovo	Serbia
How many journalists have signed work contracts? Do they have adequate social protection? How high are the journalists' salaries? Are they paid regularly?	Many journalists are not formally employed or have inadequate work contracts. Those with signed contracts are still not sufficiently protected and do not enjoy all legally guaranteed labour rights. According to a survey, more than 61% have permanent working positions. Salaries range from 500 to 1,000 BAM (from 250 to 500 euro), but in the local media salaries are much lower.	Half of the journalists in earn salaries lower than the national average. Very often salaries are not paid regularly. The average salary of journalists is 18.800 MKD net (app. 310 euro) per month, which is about 30% less than the average salary in 2018. More than a half of the total number of journalists does not have signed employment contracts.	There is no information on the number of journalists who have contract. The Statistical Office of Montenegro registered a decline in the number of workers in the media sector, where currently 1,350 people are employed. The journalists' salaries are below state averages and more than one third of the respondents receives from 400 to 500 euro. Wages are higher in private media, while the earnings of those journalists working in local media are frequently late and in some cases up to eight months.	Economic insecurity, fear of losing one's job, undervalued work and unpaid overtime work remain a problem for journalists in 2018. Many of the journalists work without ever signing a work contract and they have no social protection	No precise data exists, but it is well known that many journalists work without working contracts. Very few media offer social protection for journalists. Salaries are low and there are complains of salaries not being paid regularly. The survey conducted within this project two years ago, showed that 22.5% of the interviewed journalists said that their monthly salary is between 300 and 400 euro, 13.5% between 200 and 300 euro and 16.2% between 400 and 500 euro.

Do private media outlets' newsrooms have adopted internal codes of ethics or do they comply with a general code of ethics?	Most of the private media do not have internal codes but adhere to the general code of ethics.	Private media do not have internal codes of ethics. They adhere to the general code of ethics – the AJM code.	Private media have not adopted internal codes of ethics. They adhere to the general code of ethics. This document will be amended in the near future to incorporate provisions on new media and the internet.	Very few media have internal codes of ethics. Most of the private media adhere to the Code of ethics of the Press Council.	Most of the private media do not have internal codes but adhere to the Journalist's Code of Ethics adopted by the two biggest journalists' associations: IJAS and JAS. The Association of Online Media also has a Code of Ethics.
What are the most common forms of pressure that media owners and managers exert over the newsrooms or individual journalists?	The most frequent forms of pressures used by media owners and managers are of economic nature. These pressures create high levels self-censorship among journalists.	Direct forms of pressure: threats of losing job, temporary working contracts. Some journalists (from bigger TV stations) are subject to mobbing.	Due to the fear of potential consequences, journalists do not speak openly about pressures, but off the record testify about them and adjust their work according to the will of editors and owners.	The most common pressures are threats of losing jobs, lack of working contracts and late salaries.	The pressures on journalists by media owners are no longer directly exerted. They depend on the specific media outlet and on the individual owner – journalists usually know in advance what they are allowed to write and what is out of bounds.

B.3 What is the level of journalists' editorial independence in the PBS?
(Reporting period: September 1, 2017 – August 31, 2018)

Indicators	Bosnia and Herzegovina	Macedonia	Montenegro	Kosovo	Serbia
Does the PSB have an adopted code of journalists' conduct and editorial independence? Do the journalists comply with this code?	All PSBs have adopted internal editorial codes, but they are not available on their websites. In practice, these codes are often not respected.	In 2017 the MRT has adopted its own Code of Ethics, though it has been criticised by some media organizations including the AJM – the code envisages an existence of an ethics body within the PSB, but it does not ensure transparency in the election of its members. The work of this body has not been assessed so far.	The RTCG has its own ethical code for all employees. An integral part of the working contracts signed with the journalists are the provisions of that ethical code. However, there is no separate code of ethics for journalists. Editorial independence is a concern for RTCG.	RTK has its own code of conduct and it is perceived as advanced but the editorial independence is poorly implemented in practice	RTS and RTV do not have their own specific codes of ethical principles for reporting. The editorial independence is prescribed by the Law and the statutes, but it is not sufficiently implemented in practice.
Do the PSB bodies have a setup of internal organizational rules to keep the newsrooms independent from the PBS managing bodies? Are those rules respected?	PSBs have adopted internal organisational rules but newsrooms do not demonstrate independence from the managing bodies. There are frequent political pressures on the PSB employees.	MRT has internal organisational rules but that is not a guarantee of newsrooms independence from managing bodies. Even after the fall of the nationalist-populist government the perception to the contrary still persists.	The RTCG code of ethics contains rules of conduct for the members of the Council of the PSB as well as for PSBs managerial sector and the rest of the employees. It also contains principles relating to advertising practice.	PSB has its formal organisational rules but newsrooms are not independent from managing bodies.	Both PSBs have formal rules to keep the newsrooms separate and independent from management, but in practice editors and journalists are not independent.

B.3 What is the level of journalists' editorial independence in the PBS?
(Reporting period: September 1, 2017 – August 31, 2018)

Indicators	Bosnia and Herzegovina	Macedonia	Montenegro	Kosovo	Serbia
What are the most common forms of pressure that the government exerts over the newsrooms or individual journalists in the PBS?	Local public media are funded from the municipal budgets, which affects their editorial independence. When appointing management structures in public services, the ruling parties have strong influence.	Disciplinary measures are a common practice in the PSB – salary deductions, moving employees to other (lower) positions in the organisation and professional marginalisation. It has not been established whether this has been the case since the political change in Skopje. This has however been the case in the MRT since independence.	The most obvious example of open pressures on the RTCG by political power is the dismissal of the entire management and two members of the Council of the RTCG from their positions. Also the state funding of the local broadcasters is perceived to be a possible threat to these media.	Government officials have influence through the PSB management and dictate the editorial policy.	Pressures are frequent and come from different sources. State officials publicly criticise the work of public media services and thus put pressure on them. On the other hand, journalists themselves know what topics they can publish.
What was the most illustrative example of the pressure exerted over the work of entire newsrooms or individual journalists?	In June 2018 the director of the local public TV station RTV of Una-Sana canton was dismissed by the canton assembly. Other local media are also subject to similar pressures.	In the past two years the overall situation is visibly relaxed. There is no evidence to suggest present government's pressure on newsrooms the way we saw until 2017. Previously, leaked recordings from an illegal phone tapping practice, revealed that between 2009 and 2016 government officials had threatened PSB journalists' job security if they did not report along the "desired" lines.	The General director of the public broadcaster Andrijana Kadija has been removed from office. The justification was that she signed a contract with one NGO that contains provisions which influence the editorial policy of RTCG. In effect, this is a clear example of political manoeuvring.	The government's pressure is exerted from management and editors to individual journalists working on related news stories. There is almost no critical reporting aimed at the work of the government or the public institutions.	The programme director of Radio Television of Vojvodina was dismissed from his position in May 2016 by the RTV Board members, under political influence. In 2017, the courts have ruled that the dismissal was unlawful and obliged RTV to bring the editor back to his position. In January 2018 he was dismissed again and the court once again decided in his favour. The case is still pending.

B.4 What is the level of journalistic editorial independence in the non-profit sector?
(Reporting period: September 1, 2017 – August 31, 2018)

Indicators	Bosnia and Herzegovina	Macedonia	Montenegro	Kosovo	Serbia
Have the non-profit media adopted a code of journalists' conduct and editorial independence? Do the journalists comply with this code?	There are only few non-profit media (radio stations) in the traditional media sector. However, online not-for-profit media are mushrooming in the form of CSOs, funded from foreign donations (CIN, Žurnal, BIRN, Analiziraj.ba). The level of their editorial independence is far greater than in the private media and the PSMs.	There are only few student non-profit radio stations in Macedonia. There are also few online news portals which are established as non-profit media and which conduct most of the serious investigations in the country. These have professional newsrooms and adhere more strictly to ethical standards.	Non-profit media are not developed in Montenegro. The unstable and insufficient financing makes them irrelevant.	Very few non-profit media exist in Kosovo. They comply with general code of ethics of the Independent Media Commission (for broadcasting) and of Press Council (for print and online).	Non-profit media in Serbia generally do not have their own ethical codes. They accept the jurisdiction of the Journalist's Code of Ethics. While a Code of the Association of Online Media also exists. Guidelines for Implementation of the Journalist's Code of Ethics in Online Environment were produced by the Press Council.

B.4 What is the level of journalistic editorial independence in the non-profit sector?
(Reporting period: September 1, 2017 – August 31, 2018)

Indicators	Bosnia and Herzegovina	Macedonia	Montenegro	Kosovo	Serbia
What are the most common forms of pressure over the non-profit media outlets?	Institutions tend to be closed when it comes to providing access to information and transparency.	There is no evidence to suggest that the journalists from the non-profit newsrooms have in the past two years been subject to serious pressures. In the past there have been law suits and verbal threats towards these journalists made by high officials.	The biggest problem of the non-profit media is the lack of donations to finance their operations.	They are sometimes referred to as “foreign mercenaries” or “spies” because they receive funds from foreign donors.	Pressures are most often exerted through campaigns in media close to the government, in which the journalists working for the non-profit media are called “foreign mercenaries” and “traitors”. In the past year the attacks on these journalists by government officials have intensified.
What was the most illustrative example of the pressure exerted over the non-profit media?	Verbal threats are not uncommon. The Free Media Help Line registered an incident in which a political actor threatened journalists from the Centre for Investigative Journalism.	There were no such cases.	There were no such cases.	There were no such cases.	Minister Nenad Popović filed four lawsuits against the investigative research portal KRIK, in each requesting one million Dinars (almost 8,500 euro) of compensation for damages to honour, reputation and dignity. The lawsuits are related to four texts published in November 2017, each listing mostly the same information, based on files leaked within the international project “Paradise Papers”.

B.5 How much freedom do journalists have in the news production process?
(Reporting period: September 1, 2017 – August 31, 2018)

Indicators	Bosnia and Herzegovina	Macedonia	Montenegro	Kosovo	Serbia
How much freedom do the journalists have in selecting news stories they work on and in deciding which aspects of a story should be emphasised?	According to the results of the survey, 19% of the journalists reported that their news stories are frequently changed by editors, while about 13% said that their stories are often not published. Journalistic work is often not sufficiently recognized and evaluated. Between the quality of the report and loyalty to certain politicians the editors would often choose the latter.	In a financially precarious position, journalists in the public and private media rarely work on sensitive topics, and mostly cover daily political events. Debates on private television are now more common, but less so on public channels.	Journalists in general claim that they are mostly free in their work. However some problems persist: a third of the surveyed journalists claim that they have a small degree of freedom in the selection of topics to cover. Journalists have more freedom deciding on the angle of the chosen topic. 66% has stated that they are free to choose their own angle.	Journalists from Kosovo claim that editors and owners tend to influence their work in cases when the story might open up problems in terms of interfering with certain groups’ financial or other interests.	Journalists in very few media enjoy that freedom. A recent study has shown that 47% of the respondents have personally witnessed editors refusing a proposition to cover certain topics. In addition, 39% of the respondents have said that editors asked them to cover topics for which there is no professional justification.
How often do the journalists participate in editorial and newsroom coordination (attending editorial meetings or assigning reporters)?	Most of the journalists regularly attend editorial meetings.	Interviews conducted by AJM suggest that it is common that journalists in big media do not attend editorial meetings.	60% of journalists often or regularly participate in editorial meetings.	Most of the journalists regularly attend editorial meetings.	62% of surveyed journalists always or very often attend editorial meetings. However, this practice heavily depends on the media in which the journalist works.

B.5 How much freedom do journalists have in the news production process?
(Reporting period: September 1, 2017 – August 31, 2018)

Indicators	Bosnia and Herzegovina	Macedonia	Montenegro	Kosovo	Serbia
What are the journalists' self-perceptions on the extent to which they have been influenced by different sources of influence: editors, managers, owners, political actors, state?	According to the survey, journalists said that they were faced with pressures (daily or very often) from the following sources: politicians in power (38%), media owners (28.5%), editors (28.5%) and advertisers (23.2%).	Interviews conducted by AJM suggest that editors are very influential on the selection of topics. There is still a perception that political actors influence media content.	The study conducted within this project shows that a hierarchy of influences exists. 80% of the journalists have said that their content is influenced by editors. Furthermore, managing bodies in the media influence content with 53% of the respondents claiming as much. The owners of the media are in the third place. The last are political actors and authorities. In all probability, the political influence on journalists is done through their editors.	Journalists claim that editors are the most influential individuals in their work.	The survey conducted in 2016 for the purpose of this research has shown that most of the influence comes from editors, nearly 77% of the respondents have said so. However, other research studies indicate that the ultimate source of influence are political actors.
How many journalists report censorship? How many journalists report they succumbed to self-censorship due to fear of losing their job or other risks?	Between 23% and 26% of the surveyed journalists responded that censorship or self-censorship is present in their media.	In 2018 the AJM has recorded only one case of censorship. Journalists rarely decide to react in cases of censorship in Macedonia, and when they do react they insist on staying anonymous.	Journalists are divided in their assessment concerning the impact censorship has on their work. 46% claim that censorship has some influence on their work while 47% claim that the impact of censorship on their work is minimal.	Journalists state that their fellow colleagues know in advance what and how to report, having in mind their previous experience with the influence coming from owners or editors.	There is a wide spread perception amongst journalists that censorship no longer exists and that self-censorship prevails. Self-censorship is induced by fear of financial insecurity. Local media are particularly vulnerable.

C.1 Safety and Impunity Statistics

(Reporting period: September 1, 2017 – August 31, 2018; for murders 15-20 years back)

Indicators	Bosnia and Herzegovina	Macedonia	Montenegro	Kosovo	Serbia
Number and types of threats against the lives of journalists and other types of threats.	According to the Free Media Help Line, there were 16 verbal and other threats in total, including one death threat.	1 (one) verbal death threat registered in the reporting period.	1 (one) verbal death threat registered in the reporting period.	24 cases of verbal and other threats were registered. Out of these, 7 were threats against the lives of journalists.	21 cases of verbal and other threats were registered in the reporting period.
Number of actual attacks. How many journalists have been actually attacked?	5 actual attacks were registered (1 was a murder attempt, 1 was attack on journalists' vehicle whereby a part of the media property was also destroyed and 3 were physical attacks on journalists). In 2 of these cases journalists were prevented from reporting from certain events with physical violence.	5 actual attacks were registered (1 physical assault, 2 arbitrary detentions of journalists, 1 damage of journalist' property and 1 prevention from reporting).	3 actual attacks were registered (1 was a murder attempt, 1 was throwing of an explosive device in front of a journalist' house and 1 was burning a journalist' car).	4 actual attacks were registered (3 journalists have been attacked physically and 1 was arbitrary detention).	7 actual attacks were registered (6 physical attacks on journalists and 1 attack on a journalist' property).

C.1 Safety and Impunity Statistics
(Reporting period: September 1, 2017 – August 31, 2018; for murders 15-20 years back)

Indicators	Bosnia and Herzegovina	Macedonia	Montenegro	Kosovo	Serbia
Number and types of murders. How many journalists were murdered in the past 15-20 years?	There are no such cases.	Officially, there are no such cases.	1 murder: 2004.  In 2004, Duško Jovanović, the editor in chief of the daily Dan, was murdered.	There are no such cases in the last decade.  From 1998 until 2005, there were 14 journalists murdered and disappeared. 8 of them were assassinated, while 6 of them are still considered as missing.	3 murders: 1994, 1999 and 2001.  In 1994, Radislava Dada Vujasinović, journalist of the magazine Duga; in 1999, Slavko Ćuruvija, journalist, editor in chief and owner of Daily Telegraph; in 2001, Milan Pantić, correspondent of Večernje Novosti, from Jagodina.
Number and types of threats and attacks on media institutions, organisations, media and journalists' associations.	30 of which most were addressed to BH Journalists.	There are no such cases.	1 case was registered. The premises of the newspaper Sloboda were damaged in October 2017.	2 cases were registered. A news portal was attacked three times in a short period of time; A media outlet was threatened by a person via telephone.	9 cases were registered. The journalists' associations that are critically oriented towards the Government were subject to continuous pressures, attacks and intimidation.

C.2 Do state institutions and political actors take responsibility for the protection of journalists?
(Reporting period: September 1, 2017 – August 31, 2018)

Indicators	Bosnia and Herzegovina	Macedonia	Montenegro	Kosovo	Serbia
Have the state institutions developed specific policies to support the protection of journalists, offline and online? If yes, is the implementation of such policies assured with sufficient resources and expertise?	Some positive developments in 2017: the Ombudsman on Human Rights published the Special Report on the Status and Cases of Threats against Journalists in Bosnia and Herzegovina; the Ministry of Justice initiated meetings aimed at improving the level of journalists' safety.	State institutions haven't yet developed specific policies or measures for protection of journalists. Impunity from prosecution still presents a problem.	State institutions haven't yet developed specific policies or measures for the protection of journalists. There is a general perception that limited progress has been achieved in resolving the past cases of violence against journalists.	Comprehensive policies to support protection of journalists haven't been developed yet. State Prosecution Office has appointed prosecutors in five centres to deal with this issue. The Basic Court in Pristina has appointed a coordinator to deal with cases of threats and attacks against journalists.	Comprehensive policies haven't been developed yet, but the following steps have been undertaken so far: Agreement on cooperation and measures to raise security levels related to journalists' safety signed in 2016; Standing Working Group was composed to improve the protection of journalists, but in November 2017 the five journalists and media associations suspended their participation, because they were not satisfied with the work of the group.

C.2 Do state institutions and political actors take responsibility for the protection of journalists?
(Reporting period: September 1, 2017 – August 31, 2018)

Indicators	Bosnia and Herzegovina	Macedonia	Montenegro	Kosovo	Serbia
Are there any mechanisms (institutions, programmes and budgets) for monitoring and reporting on threats, harassment and violence towards journalists? Who monitors and keeps records of attacks and threats? Do the state institutions publish updated data regarding attacks on journalists and impunity? What measures are taken upon the incidents and by whom?	There are no specific mechanisms. Free Media Help Line is still the only mechanism which distributes data to all state institutions, media organisations and international organisations.	There are no specific mechanisms. The AJM register is the only existing database. The Report of the Ministry of Internal Affairs confirmed the problem of impunity. Of 59 attacks in the last five years, only two perpetrators were sanctioned.	There are no specific mechanisms. Currently, there is no separate evidence kept on the threats, harassment and violence towards journalists. The statistical data recorded by the Police is very general. The officials from the Police declared that a new working position will be opened specifically for dealing with this issue.	There are no such mechanisms, but some measures have been undertaken: the Basic Court in Pristina intends to develop a database of cases of threats and attacks against journalists. The Kosovo police already has a database but agreed to oblige the Department of Serious Crimes to deal with cases of threats and attacks against journalists.	There are no such mechanisms, but some measures have been undertaken: the Public Prosecution Office adopted Instruction for gathering evidence of crimes against journalists and attacks on internet sites. Urgent measures are envisaged in case of attacks on journalists. The information regarding the cases gathered by the public prosecution has been submitted to journalists' associations until the end of 2017, but this practice stopped in 2018. The Ministry of Interior has not adopted any instructions and has not started keeping records.
Are the attacks on the safety of journalists recognised by the government institutions as a breach of freedom of expression, human rights law and criminal law? Do public officials make clear statements recognising the safety of journalists and condemning attacks upon them?	Some politicians and state institutions started paying more attention to this issue and more often condemn attacks on journalists in their public statements. For example, such attacks are recognised as a breach of freedom of expression in the public reactions of the Ombudsman on Human Rights.	Public officials often condemn the attacks on journalists, but the state institutions still do not sufficiently recognize these attacks as a breach of freedom of expression.	Almost all the attacks are condemned by the public officials. However, the number of unresolved cases of violence or threats is still very high, while some cases have already expired.	Public officials condemn attacks, but only in serious cases.	Although the state institutions have undertaken some measures, this is still not sufficient. State officials do not understand the role of the journalists in the society. They rarely condemn the attacks on journalist and if they do, then mostly on a selective basis.
Are there any documents adopted by the state institutions which provide guidelines to military and police and prohibit harassment, intimidation or physical attacks on journalists?	Specific documents adopted by state institutions do not exist. Police guidelines in dealing with the media exist and Media Guidelines in dealing with the police, have been adopted with OSCE support. However, these guidelines should be updated.	Specific documents adopted by state institutions do not exist.	Specific documents adopted by state institutions do not exist.	Specific documents adopted by state institutions do not exist.	Specific documents adopted by state institutions do not exist. The only existing document is the Instruction for gathering evidence of crimes against journalists and attacks on internet sites.

C.2 Do state institutions and political actors take responsibility for the protection of journalists?
(Reporting period: September 1, 2017 – August 31, 2018)

Indicators	Bosnia and Herzegovina	Macedonia	Montenegro	Kosovo	Serbia
Do the state institutions cooperate with the journalists' organisations on journalists' safety issues? Do the state institutions refrain from endorsing or promoting threats to journalists?	Some state institutions, namely the Ministry of Justice and the Ombudsman on Human Rights, showed willingness to closely cooperate with BH Journalists.	In general, the cooperation between the AJM and state institutions is good, but the effects of this cooperation are still lacking.	Good cooperation has been established between the Trade Union of Media of Montenegro and the Ombudsman, while the cooperation with the Ministry of Internal Affairs and the Supreme State Prosecutor's Office, is only at an initial stage.	Initial good cooperation has been established between the AJK and the State Prosecution, Basic Court of Pristina and Kosovo Police.	The 2016 Agreement signed with the Ministry of Interior, Public Prosecution and journalists' and media associations has contributed towards better communication, easier reporting and more detailed information on cases of attacks and threats. However, the number of unresolved cases is still very high, although this is one of the main objectives of the signed Agreement. Of 28 cases in 2017, only one case has been resolved.
In cases of electronic surveillance, do the state institutions respect freedom of expression and privacy? Which was the most recent case of electronic surveillance of journalists?	There is no evidence on such cases.	There is no evidence on such cases.	There is no evidence on such cases.	There is no evidence on such cases.	There is no reliable evidence on such cases. There is no efficient control over the state bodies in charge for electronic surveillance.

C.3 Does the criminal and civil justice system deal effectively with threats and acts of violence against journalists?
(Reporting period: September 1, 2017 – August 31, 2018)

Indicators	Bosnia and Herzegovina	Macedonia	Montenegro	Kosovo	Serbia
Are there specific institutions/units dedicated to investigations, prosecutions, protection and compensation in regard to ensuring the safety of journalists and the issue of impunity?	There are no such units/ departments. The cases of violence against journalists are not specifically recorded in the courts' databases and cannot be separately retrieved, tracked or reported.	There are no such departments/units.	There are no such departments/units. There is only a Commission for monitoring the investigations of attacks on journalists and media whose mandate was extended to additional two years. The Commission has in the past years identified a number of shortcomings in the investigations of 15 monitored cases.	Some measures have been undertaken: the State Prosecution has a position which coordinates the work of the appointed local prosecutors related to the investigation and the prosecution for attacks on journalists. Kosovo police recently decided that its department on serious crimes should deal with cases of threats and attacks against journalists.	There are no such departments/ units. There is only a Commission on reviewing the facts related to investigation of the murders of journalists. In August 2018, the Government extended the competences of the Commission to reviewing the investigation of murders and disappearances of journalists in Kosovo in the period from 1998 to 2001, as well as on the murders of journalists during the conflicts in former Yugoslavia, from 1991 to 1995.

C.3 Does the criminal and civil justice system deal effectively with threats and acts of violence against journalists?
(Reporting period: September 1, 2017 – August 31, 2018)

Indicators	Bosnia and Herzegovina	Macedonia	Montenegro	Kosovo	Serbia
Are there special procedures put in place that can deal appropriately with attacks on women, including women journalists?	There are no such procedures. Women in different positions in the media, including journalists, are subject to greater political and other pressures. The institutions do not have specific mechanisms to address this problem.	There are no such procedures.	There are no such procedures.	There are no such procedures.	There are no such procedures.
Do the state agencies provide adequate resources to cover investigations into threats and acts of violence against journalists?	The state agencies often do not provide adequate resources when needed, but practice showed that when there is interest for a specific case, the reactions can be fast and efficient.	Adequate resources haven't yet been provided by the state institutions.	Adequate resources haven't yet been provided by the state. Investigations are very slow and with weak results.	Adequate resources haven't been provided by the state. It is yet to be seen whether the announced measure of the Kosovo Police to oblige its Department of Serious Crimes to deal with this issue will be implemented.	Adequate resources haven't yet been provided by the state institutions.
Are measures of protection provided to journalists when required in response to credible threats to their physical safety?	There were no such cases.	There were no such cases.	There is no evidence of such measures.	There is no evidence of such measures.	Some journalists were under police protection, but the problem with these cases is that such measures last too long. For example, a journalist from Serbia has been under police protection for more than 12 years.
Are the investigations of crimes against journalists, including intimidation and threats, investigated promptly, independently and efficiently?	Investigating authorities, police and prosecutors do their jobs slowly, especially in conducting effective and thorough investigations of attacks and other criminal offenses against journalists.	Based on the evidence of AJM, the investigations of attacks and threats against journalists are not carried out promptly and efficiently.	Investigations are slow and often inefficient. Only two cases from 2018 were resolved immediately after they occurred. The most serious case of a murder attempt has not been resolved yet.	Cases are investigated promptly and independently, but the court procedures are very slow.	The investigations are not conducted promptly and efficiently. A large number of unresolved cases persists. The court procedures last too long, often without final decisions. The three cases of murders haven't been resolved yet.
Are effective prosecutions for violence and intimidation carried out against the full chain of actors in attacks, including the instigators/masterminds and perpetrators?	When the actors are politicians, public officials or other powerful individuals effective prosecutions are often not carried out.	Not even the perpetrators of the attacks on journalists are punished, nor investigations of the instigators initiated.	The biggest problem is still the fact that the instigators are never discovered. This is exemplified by the murder case of Dusko Jovanovic, and even after 14 years only one accomplice was convicted.	No. The real instigators or masterminds are never discovered.	Only the perpetrators are identified and convicted, while the masterminds remain unidentified.
Does the State ensure that appropriate training and capacity is provided to police, prosecutors, lawyers and judges in respect to protection of freedom of expression and journalists?	Some forms of training for building the capacity of police officers, prosecutors and judges have been organised so far, but they are still insufficient.	Some forms of trainings have been organised for the police officers and prosecutors, with the support of OSCE in Macedonia.	Several forms of training were organised with the support of the Council of Europe project JUFREX in the first half of 2018 for: nine state prosecutors, 34 judges, seven advisors in the courts and one in the State Prosecution Office. There are plans to continue with similar training.	There is an on-going project in Kosovo that provides training to prosecutors and judges in respect to protection of freedom of expression and journalists.	Several rounds of training is envisaged with the Agreement on cooperation and measures to raise security levels related to journalists' safety signed in 2016, but they haven't been implemented yet.
